THERAPY TYPES

It can be confusing to know what "type of therapy" you require, there are so many frameworks and theories that therapists use. We want to share with you some of the therapy frameworks and practices we utilize in our team.

We work from the following theoretical frameworks:

- Relational Psychotherapy - is a therapeutic approach based on the idea that mutually satisfying relationships with others are necessary for one's emotional well-being.
- Comprehensive Resource Model (CRM)® - is a neuro-biologically based, affect-focused trauma treatment model which facilitates targeting of traumatic experiences by bridging the most primitive aspects of the person and their brain (midbrain/brainstem), to their purest, healthiest parts of the self.
- Trauma Informed Stabilization Treatment (TIST) - developed to provide a trauma-informed approach to the challenges of treating self-destructive behavior
- Attachment-Focused - is an approach to therapy that specifically targets those thoughts, feelings, communications, behaviors, and interpersonal exchanges that clients have learned either to suppress and avoid or to amplify and overemphasize because of early attachment experiences.
- Neurobiological - an approach to mental health counselling that considers the relationship between the mind, brain, body, environment, social interaction, and well-being
- Sensorimotor - is a holistic approach to healing trauma or unhealthy attachment patterns formed in early childhood. It integrates the body and movement into traditional talk therapy to address and heal ongoing psychological and physical difficulties.
- Yoga Therapy - is the process of empowering individuals to progress toward improved health and well-being through the application of the teachings and practices of Yoga

STARTING THERAPY

Nervous?

If you feel embarrassed or nervous to come to therapy, you are not alone. The most common reason people do not access mental health services is that they are worried about being judged by the therapist or other people who know they are seeking help. We aim to create a non-judgmental and confidential environment so that you can feel comfortable doing your therapy work and talking to us if difficulty between us arises.

YOU ARE IN THE RIGHT PLACE IF YOU..

- Are looking to understand how to feel more connected in relationships.
- Are willing to commit the time and energy for regular sessions and possibly homework to engage in the process of change.
- Recognize that our role as therapists is to create a comfortable space for you to explore your emotions and to guide you as you work to connect more deeply to others and your internal world.
- Appreciate a caring, intuitive, experienced, hopeful and authentic healing dialogue.
- Are interested in alternatives to 1:1 therapy; retreats, yoga therapy, psychoeducational groups to address trauma, parenting, teen issues, depression and anxiety symptoms.

ENDING THERAPY

There will be a time when your therapy will come to an end, this ending may not be forever, because therapy is always available when you need it. We discuss with our clients when we feel the time is right to approach the subject of transitioning out of therapy and clients are always welcome to end therapy when they feel ready.

There are no "rules" about how long your therapy will last, each person is individual - the goal is that we have a closing session when you decide to end your work for now, and you are in place where you will continue to heal and grow.

trust in us*
